The authors have addressed all my comments for this paper and answered the technical questions I have for this method. The paper has been significantly improved after revising. But I still have two minor suggestions for the authors about figures. I will recommend the editor accept this paper and publish it after they are addressed.

(1)   I know this is a technology/methodology paper, but I suggest the authors add a subplot in Figure 3 to show the location of the study site in a map view. In that case, the readers know where the study site is.

(2)   I understand these red dots in Figure 5 indicate the timestamps of triggers. However, I found it's very difficult to tell in this Figure, especially for subplot a and b. I think using arrows or another way will be better than this.